

MOUNTAIN MARCH

Walk, climb or cycle your mountain
Sat 30th & Sun 31st March
#CACMountainMarch

Hi, I'm a research assistant at Goldsmiths, University of London. Climbing saved me from a break-down during my PhD and from other unfortunate experiences. I believe that climbing isn't an individual sport with individual benefits, but its practice can help the community.

I'm not an experienced climber yet enthusiast to learn and get better at it. Climbing multi-pitch routes have been in my head for quite some time now, and I finally committed to it. On 30th-31st March, together with my mate Joe, we'll climb my first multi-pitch routes. I didn't decide the route yet, so if you know any good one please in UK get in touch! To make my challenge somehow beneficial for the community, I'm supporting the #CACMountainMarch initiative by Climbers Against Cancer (CAC).

CAC is an organisation that raises funds for cancer research in UK and not only (for details see www.climbersagainstcancer.org).

As many of us know, Brexit means harder or no access to European funds, which cover a large slice of UK research funds. I believe this is one more reason to contribute, and not only towards cancer research.

I already appreciated that you spent a couple of minutes of your time to read this post! Please spread the word, and if you wish to DONATE you can do it through this link: givi.ng/t7jf and the QR code below. I've also set-up a Facebook page named "Climbing for research", where you can track my training and future challenges! To clarify, donations do not go to me in any way, but directly to the CAC, which will then give them to different cancer research organisations.

Alternatively, you can support #CACMountainMarch by becoming a fundraiser (for details see the CAC website).

Thanks for your support 😊
Balandino.
